I used to have a belief that making wishes was not necessarily wrong. It was a way to express our desires and hopes in life. I had faith that whatever I prayed for, God would listen and respond according to my needs. Many of my prayers have been answered, and I have seen the power of God's guidance in my life. Some may wonder why I haven't been cured, but I believe that God has a plan for me and that my life has a purpose. I have learned to be content with the life I have been given and trust in God's timing.

There were moments when I felt that time had not yet come for me to be healed or for certain things to happen. But I knew that one day, I would understand why and how I needed to be cured. I have had many experiences with my faith and have seen the hand of God working in my life. I believe in God and hold a deep love for Jesus. Whether I receive what I ask for or not, I know that God’s blessings are abundant and far surpass my requests. Throughout my 18 years of life, God has guided me through both joys and challenges, knowing exactly what I needed. I find solace in the fact that God will be with me until the end, providing comfort and strength.

If this life presents difficulties, I find comfort in the belief that the afterlife will be even better. Writing in my personal diary allows me to express my thoughts and emotions freely, and I find satisfaction in pouring out my heart to God in those pages.
